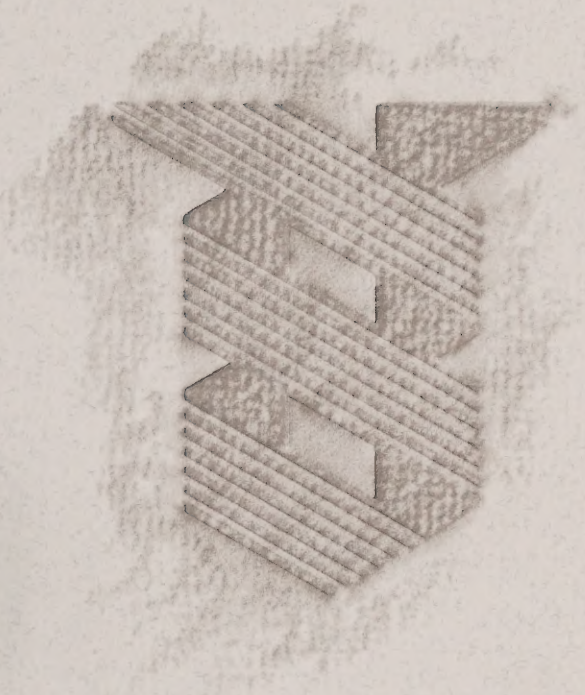
Beth Israel Hospital Boston 1986/87
Profiles in Excellence



Beth Israel Hospital has always focused its mission on patient care, teaching, and research. These broad areas encompass the hospital's commitment to caring for today's and tomorrow's patients. The emphasis on teaching ensures competent and caring health professionals for the future, while biomedical research affords the opportunity to understand the complexity of illness and to seek effective treatments and cures.

In today's complex world of increasing demands on health-delivery systems and the need to manage them as efficiently and sensitively as possible, the role of operational expertise and strategic planning is an increasingly important factor in bringing the highest quality of health care to those who need it most.

The Profiles in this report outline Beth Israel's approach to excellence in patient care, teaching, research, and sound management by focusing on some of the individuals who epitomize the qualities that characterize this major teaching hospital.

Patient Care.

Beth Israel's reputation as one of the nation's leading general teaching hospitals was founded on an approach to patient care that combines the latest medical research and technology with sensitivity to patients' concerns. Nearly 25,000 inpatients received treatment at Beth Israel in 1986, while ambulatory visits reached a record high of more than 181,000. The 24-hour Berenson Emergency Unit, part of the Longwood Area Trauma Center, treated nearly 36,000 patients. The Home Care program provided more than 14,000 visits to chronically ill patients by nurse practitioners, physicians, social workers, and home health aides.

The hospital's department of obstetrics and gynecology, under the direction of Dr. Emanuel A. Friedman, has become one of the leading services of its kind. Its labor and delivery unit is equipped with modern birthing rooms and a 12-bed special care nursery. This year, 4,600 babies were born at Beth Israel.

The division of cardiovascular medicine, under Dr. William Grossman, has emerged as one of the most active and innovative services. Staff members have pioneered developments in the treatment of diseased coronary arteries and valves, and in the application of artificial-heart technology to victims of cardiogenic shock.

Another service that has reached increasing prominence is oncology. Under Dr. Lowell Schnipper, the department is making strides in the understanding and treatment of cancer for both hospitalized patients and those who receive their care as outpatients.

In the division of infectious diseases, Dr. Clyde Crumpacker has been treating victims of AIDS with experimental drugs that may ease their suffering and prolong life. His work is at the international forefront of clinical investigation in the field.

The department of surgery's transplant team gives patients with advanced kidney disease a new lease on life. Soon the team will perform pancreas transplants, which could prevent the development of juvenile diabetes in some patients.

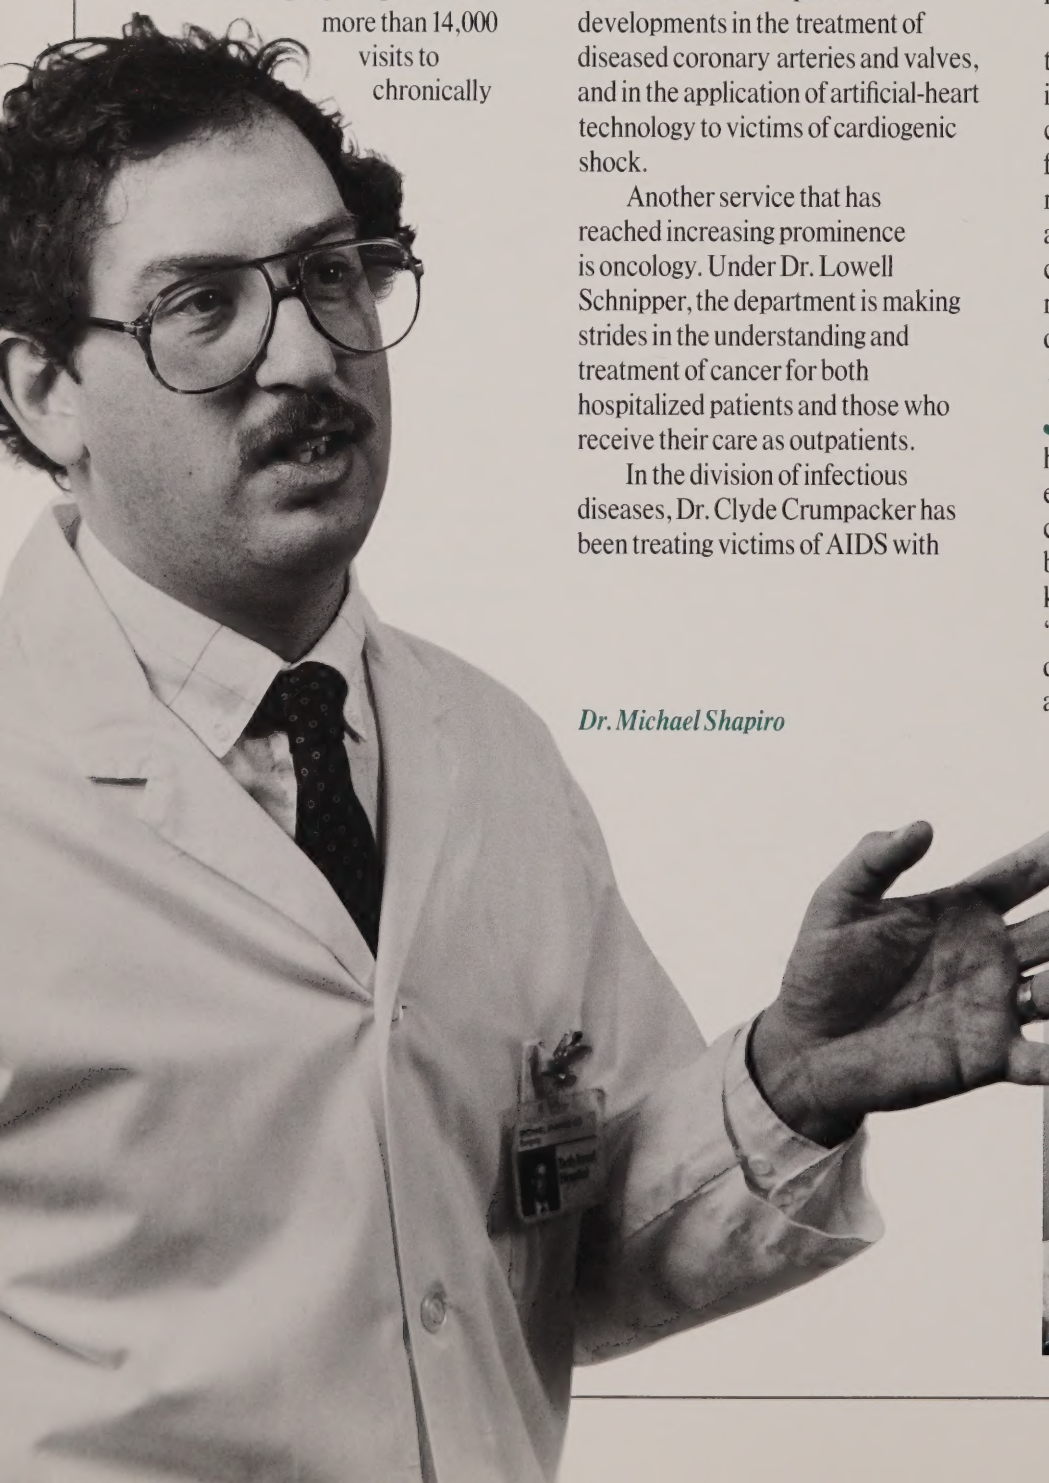
Beth Israel's ambulatory surgery program, one of the oldest and most comprehensive in a major teaching hospital, is now responsible for more than 60 per cent of all elective surgical procedures performed at Beth Israel.

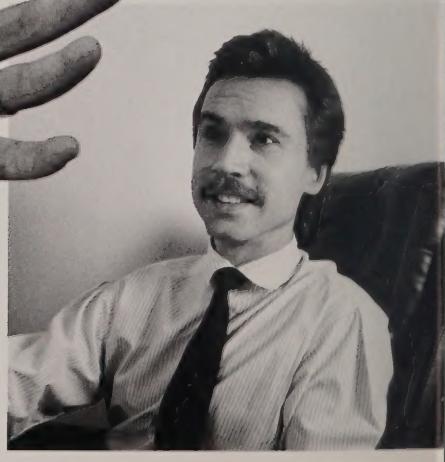
The hospital's commitment to the public's well-being was well illustrated by last fall's colorectal cancer screening campaign. Of 24,000 free tests processed at Beth Israel, more than 1,000 showed signs of abnormal bleeding, which in some cases is an early sign of cancer. So far, more than 30 malignancies have been diagnosed.

John Labine, a thirty-six-year-old Concord resident, never expected his test to come back positive. An editor for a local consulting firm, Labine considered himself in "great health" before he participated in the program, known as "The Test You Can't Fail." "I was running eight miles a day, doing Nautilus several times a week, and eating a sensible diet."

Dr. Michael Shapiro

Patient John Labine





But three weeks after Labine mailed his Hemoccult test to Beth Israel, he received a phone call from gastroenterologist Dr. Helen Shields, medical director of the screening program. Because several of his stool samples tested positive, Shields recommended he have a colonoscopy – a diagnostic examination of the colon.

Labine admits, "I was very nervous. I knew there was a possibility one of these tests would turn up cancer." Much to Labine's relief, Shields found two benign polyps, one of which, however, is often a precursor to cancer.

"Had I not taken the Hemoccult test for early detection, I could have ended up in a very grim situation," says Labine.

For Michelle Heywood, RN, a primary nurse since 1984, caring is a major aspect of her job. "In a large teaching hospital, a patient is treated by many different people. There has to be someone the patient can always rely on. Being a patient advocate is a major part of what the primary nurse does."

A graduate of Simmons College, Heywood decided to become a nurse because of her love of science and a desire "to help people." Although she studied the concept of primary nursing in school, she says "it's only when you work at Beth Israel that you realize what it really is. I have 24-hour accountability for my primary patients."

Heywood acknowledges that being a nurse is often stressful, but she can't imagine doing anything else. "Being in the hospital isn't a wonderful time for anybody. I feel I've had a good day if I've made my patients' stay a little happier."

For Dr. Michael E. Shapiro, a third-generation physician, a career in general surgery meant an opportunity to "fix things" for people. But he cautions his students at Harvard Medical School that "there's a lot more to being a surgeon than having a good pair of hands."

Many of Shapiro's patients must deal, for example, with the trauma of breast cancer, and seek several medical opinions before they actually go ahead with surgery. "Sometimes what they're looking for is a person with whom they can connect. A lot of trust can be built when a patient believes that you're really interested in helping them understand their disease."

After nearly a decade at Beth Israel, Shapiro says he still senses something special. "I see an incredible amount of caring by the staff here. We see patients as people."

Seeing patients as people, and not just as clusters of symptoms, is characteristic of the particular quality of patient care long associated with Boston's Beth Israel. It is that special concern for the individual that is often the most memorable quality for patients who have also been the beneficiaries of the highest level of clinical and technological excellence.

Research.

"A commitment to ongoing biomedical research is critical to a teaching hospital if it is to attract a top-notch medical staff," says Joan Pinck, director of the office of research administration and policy. Top-notch medical people want to be in a place where they can be involved in research. Beth Israel's commitment to conducting significant research across a broad spectrum of medical disciplines enables it to attract those who want to be at the cutting edge of health care.

With funding from foundations, private donations, and commercial sponsors, the hospital has tripled the amount it spends on research since 1979. In 1986, Beth Israel ranked sixth among the nation's independent hospitals in the amount of grant funding received from the National Institutes of Health, the major federal funding source of medical research.

While the hospital carries out research projects in diverse areas, Beth Israel is particularly active in the fields of cardiology, neurology, radiology, aging, metabolism, nephrology, infectious diseases, orthopedic biomechanics, hematology and oncology, gastroenterology, pulmonary medicine, and dermatology.

Among the hospital's most promising research developments of the year was a highly sensitive blood test that has proven 90 per cent accurate in detecting many kinds of cancer. Developed by Drs. Eric Fossel of radiology, and Justine M. Carr and Jan McDonagh of pathology, the test measures the magnetic properties of molecules in blood plasma. The test, which attracted international attention among scientists and clinicians, and, through the media, the general public, could be available for widespread use within two years if further experiments continue to demonstrate its value as an early detection tool.

To maintain Beth Israel's status as a leader in biomedical research, the hospital provides its staff with excellent facilities and support. The Charles A. Dana Building, completed in 1982, provides new facilities for about 300 individuals conducting research at the hospital. Housed in Dana are Harvard's famed Thorndike Laboratories, the oldest clinical research facility in the country. Altogether, there are 150 research laboratories in active use at Beth Israel.

One innovative researcher and clinician at Beth Israel is Dr. Jeffrey Flier, who began studying diabetes in 1974 and now leads research in his specialty as director of the diabetes unit. "We've combined extremely practical, therapeutic investigation with more theoretical, biochemical study of diabetes," says Flier.

Several years ago, Flier and his colleague Dr. Alan Moses introduced a technique by means of which diabetics could administer insulin to themselves with nasal inhalers. Major pharmaceutical companies are now conducting the clinical trials necessary to make nasal insulin generally available.

Currently, Flier is studying the genetics of sugar transport, "taking it apart step by step to push back what's still unknown about diabetes." In order for glucose, the body's primary sugar supply, to get into cells to metabolize, it must pass through the cell membrane with the help of selective pores or glucose transporters. Flier is concentrating his work on the gene that makes glucose transporters and investigating such questions as how the gene is expressed in diabetics as opposed to nondiabetics and what drugs and hormones may make the gene more active.

At Beth Israel, nurses are actively involved in their own research programs. For example, three nurses on the oncology unit are studying how they can better support and educate the families of cancer patients.

Donna Black, RN, Mary Jane Sadler, RN, and Dianne St. Angelo, RN, treat cancer patients every day. A year ago, they noticed that although cancer patients seemed well-cared-for by doctors, primary nurses, and social workers, the families of hospitalized cancer patients needed something more from the oncology unit.

"Relatives of the patient would pull us aside outside the room to ask us questions," says Black. "They wanted to know how bad the condition really was or if we'd seen other patients with the same condition recover. Often family members would feel guilty leaving a patient even for an hour to take care of things they needed to do for themselves."

Together with social workers Vicki Rance, MSW, and Michael Hubner, MSW, the nurses started a weekly support group for families of hospitalized cancer patients. Though the first eight weeks of the support group were well-attended, participation at future meetings dwindled.

To find out why attendance dropped and how the support group could be more helpful, the nurses decided to survey families of cancer patients. A questionnaire distributed to families will help determine how the support group can best address the emotional and psychological support needs of relatives of cancer patients.

The nurses seek answers to such questions as: Do relatives want to be involved in the care of the patient? Do they understand the hospital system and are they aware of their resources? How can we best help them to maintain a level of hope? This information will be reported to other nurses and physicians. "We hope the families tell us what is most important to them and how we can best help them."

Beth Israel's strong commitment to medical and clinical research has resulted in many significant advances in the practice of medicine. As 1987 progresses, researchers at the hospital are working to advance the frontiers of medical knowledge even further.

Teaching.

Much of the learning that takes place at a major teaching hospital such as Beth Israel occurs not in the institution's lecture halls and seminar rooms, but in less formal settings: patient bedsides, nursing stations, and emergency and intensive care units.

The informal teaching environment, however, does not obscure the fact that Beth Israel is a major educational institution as well as a hospital. More than 1,200 medical students, residents, and fellows train here each year, and there are extensive training programs for nurses, medical technicians, social workers, and dieticians as well.

The training of health care professionals is a basic responsibility of all teaching hospitals. In addition, teaching is an excellent way to sustain high standards of care. Staff members, to be effective teachers, must keep up with advances in their fields.

While noted for the quality of its educational offerings, Beth Israel continues to look for ways to enhance the scope and effectiveness of its teaching efforts.

One initiative, developed in cooperation with Harvard Medical School, is an annual award for a staff physician or scientist who is regarded by his or her students as an especially good teacher. The S. Robert Stone Award for Excellence in Teaching, stimulated by and named for a former chairman of Beth Israel's Board of Trustees, was first presented in 1981.

Dr. Steven Weinberger, a pulmonary medicine specialist at Beth Israel, was the 1986 winner of the Stone Award. Like many of his Beth Israel colleagues, Weinberger teaches both at Harvard Medical School and at the hospital. The lectures he gives at Harvard are rewarding, he says. But he adds that the primary means he uses for teaching at Beth Israel – taking students along on patient rounds – is the only way to impart certain types of skills.

"It's very difficult to teach about interacting with patients in an abstract setting," he notes. "It's much easier to do that when you're dealing with individual patients."

The Stone Award recipient, a native of Pennsylvania and a 1973 graduate of Harvard Medical School, says he knew from early on that he wanted to teach as well as to practice medicine, because of the intellectual stimulus provided by students.

"Students often tend to feel that the questions they ask are very simple and basic," says Weinberger, "but I find that those are frequently the most challenging questions I face."

According to Weinberger, the amount of knowledge that students must absorb has risen appreciably since he was in medical school.

Eileen Hodgman, RN, MSN, FAAN, Director, Center for the Advancement of Nursing Practice

"Physicians still have to interact with their patients, and provide the kind of support that patients need," he says, "but they also have to be prepared to deal with the growing number of diagnostic and therapeutic options that are available."

The increasing demands on students can contribute to the anxieties that many feel when dealing with patients for the first time. Weinberger says he makes the effort to convince students that they should not feel they must know everything in order to be good doctors, and that good judgment is often as crucial as knowledge.

"In a clinical setting, there are very few questions that have black-and-white answers," he says. "Most of the time you're dealing with grey areas, and that's why judgment is so important."

Another recent initiative in clinical scholarship at Beth Israel is the Center for the Advancement of Nursing Practice. The goals of the Center, which was established last year, include expanding educational and research opportunities for nurses at Beth Israel and elsewhere, and fostering improvements in patient care and teaching. Some Center programs, for example, will focus on how to deal with difficult clinical problems such as unsuccessful pregnancies. Others are aimed at making nurses better managers or teachers.

The Center will draw heavily on Beth Israel's own nursing staff for faculty, says Center director Eileen Callahan Hodgman, RN, MSN, FAAN. "We have a very strong nursing education program at Beth Israel already, with many individuals giving courses on their own," she notes.

The Center will also bring in faculty from area nursing schools and elsewhere. Its educational programs will take a variety of forms: brief workshops, three-to-four-week courses, symposia, and exchange programs with other hospitals. Also being considered are lectures by nursing school faculty that will be delivered to Beth Israel nurses over closed-circuit television hookups.

As Beth Israel meets the challenges of coming years, the importance of strong teaching programs to the hospital's mission will become ever more evident. Beth Israel must not only care for the patients of today, but must also prepare physicians, nurses, and other health care professionals to care for the patients of tomorrow.

Management.

The management of today's research-intensive teaching hospital becomes increasingly difficult year after year. Underlying the challenge is less the growing complexity of medical science and more the compelling changes in the systems of payment to hospitals and doctors. Simply put, we have moved from an era characterized by a blend of unquestioning reimbursement of costs and payment of costs-plus-profit to a time of payment levels determined by the payers themselves, in amounts which can fall too near or even below a hospital's actual costs. In Massachusetts these limitations are particularly problematic because the state, through rate-setting and regulation, places additional and overriding restrictions on revenue generation beyond those levied by the payers.

Dr. Mitchell T. Rabkin, President

David Dolins, Executive Vice President and Director

Foreground, Trustee Frank Morse and Vice President and Deputy Director Sandra Fenwick

There is no denying that yesterday's payment methodologies encouraged medical-care cost inflation through their laissez-faire and even indulgent natures. Not that hospitals and physicians are particularly avaricious, but because they existed in a system that did not penalize or even discourage overuse, hospitals and doctors – as well as patients and employers, insurers and government – all have been more than willing to allow virtually everything to be done in the interests of denying nothing in both insurance coverage and the delivery of care. Health care costs thereby escalated until those who paid the bills instituted new limits on payment designed to pressure doctors and hospitals into tempering their use of available resources, cutting operating costs, and lowering the pressure for costly enlargement of the health care system. The dilemma placed on providers of care is obvious – at what point does cost-cutting begin to subvert quality?

Our task, then, is to respond to the need to temper costs but do so in a manner allowing no critical compromise in either technical or personalized aspects of Beth Israel care. This is easier said than done, and we are already concerned about lengths of stay shortened to the point of discomfort and inconvenience to the patient. The burden falls not only on the patient; senior physicians, fellows and house staff, nurses, social workers and many other hospital personnel are facing pressures unlike anything previously experienced, as a result of escalation of the pace of care, the intensity of illness and the resulting hospital effort – all consequences of the new pressures for economy.

For a major teaching hospital such as Boston's Beth Israel the responsibility is even greater. Teaching and research are academic pursuits, requiring time for creativity and the thoughtfulness that makes for excellence; these are made vulnerable with today's demanding schedules.

All things considered, we must work for prudent expenditure in health, carefully monitoring both utilization and productivity. We must also find ways to relieve the feelings of stress developing among both patients and hospital staff. And we must nurture carefully the seed corn of our future excellence – the students and young staff and the research ideas that mature tomorrow to strengthen further our capabilities to heal and to comfort. As a national leader among hospitals, Beth Israel has the task to help forge the way. With the assistance of our staff, our patients, and our community we are determined to be up to the challenge.

Highlights of the Year.

The past year was a particularly remarkable one for Beth Israel. From an affiliation with Brookline Hospital, through a major public service campaign to detect colorectal cancer, to the announcement of landmark research pointing toward development of a reliable blood test to detect cancer, Beth Israel continued to establish cost-effective care options, promote well-being, and further scientific developments in medicine.

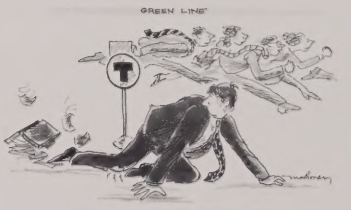
Beth Israel Medical Walk-In Center and (upper right) promotional postcard

Beth Israel, WBZ-TV4, CVS pharmacies throughout the region, and Smith/Kline Diagnostics cooperated in implementing "The Test You Can't Fail," a public service campaign supported by the American Cancer Society. The program gave participants the opportunity to take a test that detects hidden blood in the stool, which can be an early symptom of colorectal cancer and other disorders.

Two Beth Israel physicians were appointed to newly endowed professorships at Harvard Medical School.

- Dr. William Grossman, head of the division of cardiovascular medicine, was named Herman Dana Professor in Medicine.
- Dr. Lowell Schnipper, chief of oncology, was named Theodore W. and Evelyn G. Berenson Professor of Medicine for the Study of Oncology.



Banged a knee and missed the T?

Many Beth Israel staff members published papers and articles documenting major advances in biomedical and clinical research:

- Drs. Eric Fossel, Justine M. Carr, and Jan McDonagh developed an experimental blood test for cancer. The study, appearing in The New England Journal of Medicine, reported the use of nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) to measure the magnetic properties of molecules in blood plasma – a technique that potentially could detect a wide range of cancers.
- Cardiologists at Beth Israel and a small number of other laboratories developed a new nonsurgical technique for freeing obstructed heart valves in adults. The technique, called balloon valvuloplasty, involves opening up mitral and aortic valves with specially designed balloons threaded through the body's arterial system and into the threatened heart.

The Center for the Advancement of Nursing Practice was established to provide a hospital-based academic opportunity for professional growth and scholarly achievement for nurses from Beth Israel and elsewhere. The Center's first Distinguished Scholar Lecture featured Linda Aiken, RN, PhD, vice president of The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation.

Brookline Hospital, an affiliate of The Beth Israel Corporation

Beth Israel opened the Matthew and Edna Brown Medical Walk-In Center, offering convenient access to prompt, high-quality medical care. Treatment ranges from a variety of minor emergency problems such as colds, flus, cuts, sprains, bruises, and rashes, to immunizations for travelers. Since the Medical Walk-In Center is not designed to provide long-term primary care, patients who require further evaluation or treatment are referred to Healthcare Associates, other hospital outpatient areas, or the hospital's private physicians.

Beth Israel Hospital and Brookline Hospital became affiliated under The Beth Israel Corporation, linking BI with the nearby 109-bed Brookline Hospital. Brookline Hospital continues to operate autonomously, although the medical and administrative staffs of the two institutions work in close coordination with each other.

Dr. Mitchell T. Rabkin, president, and Dr. William Silen, surgeon-in-chief, both marked twenty years of service at Beth Israel.

Construction began on a new Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) building. Beth Israel will share the facility with The Children's Hospital, New England Deaconess Hospital, and Brigham and Women's Hospital, with each hospital appointing its own medical director. MRI is a technological innovation that can produce detailed images of organs, tissue, and bone structures throughout the body by analyzing the magnetic characteristics of the molecules in individual cells. It is noninvasive and does not depend on the radiation employed in conventional x-ray examinations. Intended primarily as an outpatient unit, the facility will also be available for inpatients. The off-hours will be set aside for research purposes.

"YOU CAN'T FAIL THIS TEST"
It's a FREE, easy to use test to aid in the early detection of colorectal cancer and other disorders. And you can take it in the privacy of your own home. The signs of colorectal cancer often go unnoticed for a long time, so the test could save your life... or the life of someone you love. For more information, ask your CVS pharmacist or call the special Beth Israel hotline 617-735-2777, September 8th through October 3rd.

Beth Israel Giving (BIG) Fiscal Year 1986

Beth Israel Giving (BIG) is the hospital's annual campaign. Funds raised through BIG are used for the general operating support of the hospital. During this fiscal year, September 29, 1985 through September 27, 1986, the individuals and organizations whose names appear below made contributions to the hospital through one of four donor clubs.

We apologize if we have inadvertently omitted any names, and we hope that you will inform us of any errors that may have appeared so that we can immediately correct our records.

Academic Chairs at Harvard Medical School

During the past four years, Beth Israel has been honored with the establishment of five academic chairs at Harvard Medical School, earmarked for Beth Israel physicians. Established for perpetuity, these chairs provide a secure source of funding for outstanding physicians in the academic departments.

The Theodore W. and Evelyn G. Berenson Professorship of Medicine for the Study of Oncology established by the Berenson Family and occupied by Dr. Lowell Schnipper, chief of oncology

The Herman Dana Professorship in Medicine established by Mr. Herman Dana and occupied by Dr. William Grossman, chief of the cardiovascular division

The Charlotte F. and Irving W. Rabb Professorship in Medicine, established by Mr. and Mrs. Irving W. Rabb and occupied by Dr. Raj K. Goyal, chief of gastroenterology

The George C. Reisman Professorship in Medicine, established by Mr. George C. Reisman and occupied by Dr. Stephen H. Robinson, chief of hematology

The Miriam H. Stoneman Professorship in Medicine, established by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Stoneman and occupied by Dr. Sven Paulin, radiologist-in-chief.

Capital Designation Fund

The following individuals have made gifts or pledges to Beth Israel's Capital Designation Fund. This fund provides support for the continuing process of updating Beth Israel's equipment and facilities. Gifts of $5,000 or more are recognized with a plaque which honors the donor(s) and any additional honoree(s) of their choice.

Matching Gift Companies

The companies listed below have contributed to Beth Israel during the 1986 fiscal year through their corporate matching gift programs. Corporate sponsorship of this kind allows individual contributors to double, sometimes triple, the amount of their gifts to Beth Israel. At the same time, this generosity affords Beth Israel the benefits that corporate sponsorship makes possible.
